Demands Assessed

Social Workers Surveyed

Most social service workers in Tennessee see continuing education programs as an aid in meeting their practice needs.

This was one of the facts noted in analyzing a recent survey made by the Office of Continuing Social Work Education. The purpose of the research survey was to assess the demands of social workers in the area. The information will be used to develop long-range continuing education programs designed to meet specific practice demands.

The three social treatment practice demands seen as most relevant by those surveyed were motivation problems, brief and crisis intervention and family problems.

RESEARCH ASSISTANT PHYLLIS BETTS AND RON GREEN, DIRECTOR OF CONTINUING SOCIAL WORK EDUCATION, LOOK OVER SURVEY.

In the field of administration and planning, public relations was one of the practice demands named most.

A closed-end questionnaire was utilized to survey the over 300 persons involved in the study which included three regions--Middle, East and Upper East Tennessee.

Of the group surveyed, the typical social worker in the three regions was a 26-30 year old white female with a master's degree in social work, who primarily practices social treatment in an urban community.

sentation of the entire state, but when the results are combined with another survey also conducted by the Office of Continuing Education, it should give an accurate picture. The office has just completed a survey of the State Department of Human Services, which covers a large group of social workers not included in the first survey. Analysis is not yet complete on this survey.

In addition to answering questions covering various biographical information, each respondent in the survey was asked to evaluate which needs might be best met through increased knowledge and skills in various subjects.

Besides noting the subjects of most interest, the social workers also gave their preferences on ways of receiving additional training. The responses indicate that 73 per cent prefer short workshops. With some overlap in the answers, 43.7 per cent showed an interest in a part-time degree program, 40.2 per cent checked credit courses and 37 per cent preferred sequential workshops. Most workers were in favor of morning courses during the week and 61.1 per cent needed agency time off to attend.

Also in answer to specific questions about possible continuing education programs, 39.9 per cent of the social workers indicated a need to stay within a $15 per day limit. Of the respondents, 42.4 per cent said they would not be able to travel outside Middle Tennessee for a special course or program. East Tennessee proved to be a similar location barrier for 32.5 per cent of those surveyed.

Other significant facts drawn from the survey include:

- The urban areas had a higher percentage of workers with degrees above the bachelor's level.

- Over 80 per cent of those workers with a bachelor's degree indicated aspirations of receiving their master's, while 43.2 per cent of those with a master's degree in social work were satisfied to stay at that level.

- Upper East Tennesseans aspiring for a MSW indicated the greatest regional interest in a part-time degree program.

- Both the urban and the mixed urban and rural areas had approximately 90 per cent white and 10 per cent black social workers. However, of those surveyed, 100 per cent of the social workers in strictly rural areas were white.

- Male social workers in Upper East Tennessee slightly outnumbered females while in the other two regions, the males were outnumbered approximately 3-2.

All-Time High

Enrollment Rises Again

Enrollment in the School of Social Work reached an all-time high Fall Quarter with 308 full-time students.

This figure is slightly up from last year's full-time enrollment of 306. Part-time students raised this year's total to 351. The break-down of enrollment by branch includes 148 at Nashville, 81 at Memphis and 111 at Knoxville. Also included in this year's total are the 11 students involved in the experimental part-time program at Chattanooga.

Dean Ben Granger said he is especially pleased with efforts in minority recruitment. Of the total enrollment throughout the School, 16.5 per cent are black, 82.6 per cent are white and less than one per cent are of other ethnic backgrounds. This includes one American Indian, one Korean and one Puerto Rican. Analysis of enrollment figures also indicate that more than two-thirds of the students are female. There are approximately 69 per cent female and 31 per cent male.

Enrollment in the School has increased by more than 50 per cent in the last five years.

Granger said he feels the School has at least temporarily reached the maximum student load as long as faculty resources and field practice placements remain at the present level. Until there are additional resources, he said the important thing is "that we've been able to maintain that balance and be as effective as possible."

Letter To Alumni

Dear Alumni:

Several months ago I had the pleasure of announcing the merger of the University of Tennessee School of Social Work Alumni Association with the University of Tennessee National Alumni Association. Since that time we have been the recipients of a number of mailings which have kept us up to date on the happenings of the University and our own School of Social Work.

As a result of the merger it has been necessary for us to develop a revised set of by-laws to conform to the National Association. In a recent meeting, your Board of Directors with consultation from the School of Social Work and the National Alumni Association developed the attached by-laws for your consideration and approval. The Board is requesting your approval by mail ballot which is attached.

Since our organization is in a state of "limbo" at this time we are suggesting the present Board continue to serve through June 30, 1976 at which time the new officers will assume office. We believe this will be the most effective way to implement the new by-laws.

Your continued support of the School of Social Work through the National Alumni Association is appreciated. When making contributions, please remember to note on your check "for the School of Social Work."

President,

CLASS IS TAPED FOR LATER PRESENTATION WITH VERM SYSTEM.

VERM Aids In Teaching

A new project at UT could revolutionize off-campus education, according to two School of Social Work professors involved in the program.

VERM (Videotape Electrowriter Remote Mode) is a system using videotape to present courses to off-campus students who are not able to attend classes in the usual way, explained Dr. Roger A. Lohmann, associate professor. "Courses are recorded on videotape in special classrooms equipped for lighting and sound, and then the tapes are mailed to the off-campus classroom and shown on special monitors."

Lohmann said the lecturer is in touch with his VERM students by means of the electrowriter--a device much like a teletypewriter--or by a conference telephone hook up. With either of these systems, he said the lecturer could discuss the lecture and answer questions.

Another major advantage, according to Lohmann, is the system's versatility. It should result in a significant increase in lecturers and topics to choose from, he said.

"Experts from industry and other universities could be taped and added to the material available to study for a course," Lohmann explained. "Also, material that is repeated over and over could be taped once and the tape replayed."

Dr. John Wokarski, associate professor, also involved in the project said he feels the program has a great deal of potential. He also noted that the new program could mean an increase in the number of classes offered each quarter and a decrease in the cost of off-campus teaching.

"UT has barely scratched the surface of the possibilities the VERM system has to offer," Wodarski concluded.

Editorial

A New Look

This edition of STIMULUS represents the evolution of an "in house" publication for alumni and close friends to a vehicle for bringing to all interested social workers in Tennessee current news of social work educational developments and opportunities. It represents a logical step, symbolically, from the confines of the "ivory" tower into the arena where social work is practiced. The school has made a basic commitment to bring the knowledge, research and experience of the Graduate School to the practitioner. This commitment reflects a changing attitude that views the school's consumer not only as being admitted students but begins to assume growing responsibility for making available to the total social work community educational resources.

The purpose of STIMULUS is to communicate what developments are occurring among alumni, at the school itself and in the field at large that may have relevance to those in practice. A concerted effort will be made to identify what continuing social work educational opportunities are available anywhere in the state, regardless of sponsorship. This is seen as a basic needed service to the social work community which, if developed effectively, should mean a maximization of the scarce professional development resources in Tennessee.

The name STIMULUS was selected to illustrate the goal of stimulating all practitioners to act on their professional responsibility to continually develop their practice skills and knowledge. Problems change, new information is discovered, learning can never cease.
